What happened in Syria's northwest?

In just over a week, Syrian rebel forces seized much of Syria's northwest. First, the rebels captured Syria's largest city, Aleppo, then Hama and Homs. On Sunday, they entered Syria's capital, Damascus, taking the city without a fight as government forces fled. Here's how the main rebel coalition advanced through the northwest.

What happened to the Syrian rebels in Damascus?

Even as many Syrians celebrated the rebels' advance into Damascus on Sunday morning, they were reminded of all they had lost over 13 years of civil war. The loved ones who were killed, tortured or disappeared into the regime's labyrinthine prison system. The homes they lost to airstrikes and shelling. The lives they had to abandon.

Did Syria open a new beginning after 'victory' over Assad's brutal regime?

Syria has opened a new beginning after the 'victory' over Assad's brutal regime, HTS leader Abu Mohammad al-Jolani told crowds from the Umayyad Mosque in Damascus today. "There's no house in Syria which wasn't hit by the fire of war," al-Jolani said. "And thanks to Allah, today you will be spared, God willing."

Would losing Syria be a big blow for Iran?

Losing Syria would be "a huge blow" for Iran, Parsi said. "The investment Iranians have made in Syria is very significant, it's an important land bridge to Lebanon, but also the alliance the Iranians have with the Assad regime has lasted across the Islamic Republic's history."

Is Assad a close ally of Syria?

Assad, who was Syria's president for over two decades and inherited the post from his father, Hafez al-Assad, has given orders for a peaceful transition of power, according to Russia, a close ally of the regime. Celebrations broke out in Damascus after rebels claimed victory in the 13-year civil war.
