

Does Thailand have a lithium-sodium resource?

According to the Department of Primary Industries and Mines, Thailand has discovered lithium resources exceeding 14.8 million tonnes, ranking the country third globally in lithium reserves, after Bolivia and Argentina. This discovery of potential lithium-sodium deposits is both good news and beneficial for Thailand's electric automotive industry.

Is lithium still a good news for Thailand?

"The discovery of 14.8 million tonnes of mineral resources is still a good news for all Thais, regardless of the amount of lithium found," said Ms Radklao. "All key mineral resources found in Thailand, be they lithium, sodium or potash, can contribute to the country's economic stability and reduce reliance on import."

Could lithium-ion batteries be made in Thailand?

With proper mining and refining operations, the sites could produce raw material to make lithium-ion batteries for at least one million units of 50 kWh electric vehicles. Ms Radklao said on Jan 18 that the finding of high lithium content in Phang Nga makes Thailand the country with the third-largest lithium resources after Bolivia and Argentina.

Is Thailand the world's third-largest lithium deposit?

The Ministry of Natural Resources and Environment said it has not confirmed a claim that Thailand is home to the world's third-largest site of lithium. However, the ministry's top authority confirmed that the deposits in the country's southern province of Phangnga have a higher content of lithium than many other key deposits around the world.
